Anti-Bias Education for Young Children

How we as educators respond to children's questions about their identities and differences is instrumental in helping young children navigate complex issues of diversity, prejudice and power in their daily lives.

This workshop is designed to equip early educators to confidently, powerfully and competently respond to issues of diversity and to elevate their capacity for helping young children make sense of the often-emotionally charged messages they receive about themselves and others.

Participants will explore principles of anti-bias education and effective classroom management strategies aimed at helping young children build social-emotional competence and nurture children's positive self-identity.
