

Retrospective Miscue Analysis and Repeated Readings

Training in two proven interventions for struggling readers.

Grades 4 through 12

Thurs., Dec. 8, 2016 • 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Catherine Compton–Lilly
Regional Educator and Literacy Specialist

Description

This day-long workshop will be devoted to in-depth exploration of two interventions that are critical for helping struggling readers. In the morning, participants will be introduced to Retrospective Miscue Analysis. In the afternoon, participants will be introduced to Repeated Readings. Across the day, we will delve into case studies of readers to explore possibilities and to gain insight into the use of each intervention as a means to help challenged readers. Participants will be given tools and strategies, as well as time to practice said strategies which will bolster reader achievement.

Who should attend?

Classroom teachers in grades 4 – 12, reading teachers, reading specialists, intervention teachers, teachers of students with learning disabilities, literacy coaches and administrators.

About Dr. Compton-Lilly

Catherine Compton-Lilly teaches courses in literacy studies and works with professional development schools in Madison. She has a passion for helping teachers to support children in learning to read and write. Her interests include examining how time operates as a contextual factor in children's lives as they progress through school and construct their identities as students and readers. Catherine is the author/editor of several books and has published widely in educational journals.
