Writing Across the Curriculum Grades K-5

January 24, 2018 – 9 AM-3:30 PM

Even in the early grades, students are expected to write across the curriculum, and providing multiple opportunities for writing in narrative, opinion, and informative text is vital to develop student writers. In this hands-on, interactive workshop, the presenter will explore differentiated instruction techniques for transcription skills development and then transition into a discussion of fundamental annotating strategies. Participants will examine elements of the three genres: narrative, opinion, and informative text. They will examine the specific skills to be developed for writing in each genre and practice with techniques designed to build the students' genre-writing skills. They will practice with the strategies introduced and take away strategies to try the very next day in their classrooms.

Extracting Information from Text...and Writing About It: Writing Across the Genres Grades 6-12

January 25, 2018 – 9 AM-3:30 PM

As students move into middle and high school, they are expected to read increasingly sophisticated and complex text. In the first half of this workshop, participants will work with highlighting, notetaking, and summarizing techniques for both narrative and expository text. They will practice with a variety of techniques designed to help students understand and prepare to write about text. Then, in the second half of the workshop, participants will work with genre writing, including prompt analysis, idea generation, organization, development of claim or focus, and incorporation of evidence or narrative elements. Practical for instructors across the disciplines, this hands-on, interactive workshop will leave you with strategies you can use the very next day in your classrooms!

About the presenter:

William Van Cleave

William Van Cleave is in private practice as an educational consultant whose specialties include morphology and written expression. A nationally recognized speaker, he has presented on effective teaching practices at conferences and schools around the country since 1995.

While his own background is in language-based learning difficulties, the strategies William promotes are effective for students of all skill levels and abilities. His high level of enthusiasm and energy, his interactive style, and his passion for working with teachers make him an effective presenter, whether he is visiting a school and sharing with its faculty or presenting at a national conference. He has provided professional development at state education conferences; dyslexia and learning disabilities conferences; E.L.L. conferences; and private and public schools, both specialized and mainstream.

“ William's presentation was one of the most dynamic I've ever attended - Even after 25+ years of teaching, I learned new things about sentence skills and comprehension.

And a quote from him—'Technology and interactive learning are going to change traditional writing in the next 10 years—in the work world, much writing is done after discussion and collaboration.' ”
