

Equity and Social Justice Institute 2.0

This day-long institute has been designed to provide a deeper understanding for engaging in and sustaining equity work on behalf of students and families.

About the Equity and Social Justice Institute 2.0

The Network's day-long institute focuses on equity and social justice in education and is designed to deepen and sustain learning centered around these critical themes. This institute has been purposefully planned as a follow-up to the original Equity and Social Justice Institutes.

During this institute, participants will explore the meaning of social justice and examine how power and privilege play out in society and, more specifically, in education. Participants will be encouraged to examine the inequities that play out in schools and collaborate to find effective ways to create more equitable institutions that serve all students, putting their action plans into effect. Participants will have an opportunity to explore how implicit bias, color blindness, and micro-aggressions impact the lives of their students. Facilitators will facilitate a shared discussion about how educators can teach through an equitable multi-levelled system of support while providing examples of that it means to teach for social justice.

Participant Outcomes

As a result of participating in this institute, attendees will:

- Explore Wisconsin's Model for Equitable Culturally Responsive Practices and how the concepts play out in their classrooms and schools;
- Examine the inequities that students may be experiencing in their classrooms and schools;
- Deepen their understanding of implicit bias, color blindness and micro-aggressions and examine what it looks like for themselves and their students.
