There is great diversity among learners in every school. The educational community has a responsibility to provide rigorous learning opportunities for each learner. Teachers must have the skills to differentiate or plan their instruction to provide the opportunity for every student to learn every day. Teaching the gifted needs of children is both exciting and challenging. This series is designed for educators to collaborate around equitable identification tools, program planning, classroom strategies, and resources that can support teachers and parents in their quest to meet the gifted/talented needs of students.

OBJECTIVES

- Explore and evaluate processes for identifying the unique gifts and talents of students that are equitable for the diverse student population
- Review and update the district gifted/talented plan using the NAGC Gifted Programming Standards as a guide
- Use research to guide analysis of programs, opportunities and resources connected to core curriculum for gifted/talented students

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

- Educators responsible for GT program planning, identifying student needs in the areas of giftedness, and providing learning opportunities to meet identified needs of students
- This may include: Gifted and Talented Coordinators, Teachers, School Psychologists, and Administrators
