Body Processing: Regulation and Sensory In-Person Training

The way our body takes in, interprets and reacts to the world can vary for a variety of reasons. In this training participants will be introduced to this process and possible places students might be experiencing differences that cause unexpected reactions. Staying curious and learning more about a student's perspective and how their body is adapting can support educators and families to be able to support that student be the best they can be. Through looking at our sensory processing systems and our regulatory systems we can build support to help students navigate the world they are experiencing.
