Micro Lessons in Writing

How Every Teacher is a Teacher of Writing

January 29, 2014 • 8:30 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Presenter: Jim Vopat

Description:

No matter what subject you teach, incorporating micro lessons in writing will increase student understanding and achievement without perpetuating writing anxiety or adding to the correction work load. Too good to be true? Experience micro lessons that you can readily adapt for your classroom—deep yet simple strategies for getting started, revising, editing and publishing from Jim Vopat's Micro Lessons in Writing book. Experience how, for students and teachers, less is more. Keywords: content-area writing, writing workshop, differentiated instruction, Common Core State Standards in Writing.

About the Presenter:

Micro Lessons in Writing and Writing Circles are the latest innovations in Jim Vopat's career-long pursuit of powerful writing instruction and collaboration. At the core of Jim's work are his beliefs that every student is a writer, and that every teacher is a teacher of writing. To this end, he founded and currently co-directs the Milwaukee Writing Project. Jim's other publications include influential essays about writing and parent-family partnerships, a series of parent-leadership video tapes, and What Makes Writing Good, The Parent Project, and More than Bake Sales. Jim has been a senior Fulbright Scholar to Sri Lanka and earned his Ph.D. from the University of Washington-Seattle.
