

Challenging All Readers with SEM-R (grades 3-8)

While SEMR was developed as an enrichment program, research shows that this model is not just for gifted readers. This seminar will summarize the research and provide current research about what currently happens to students American classrooms. Attention will be focused on the special needs of gifted readers as well as the specific differentiated strategies necessary to help all learners progress in reading. The Schoolwide Enrichment Model ReadingFramework (SEMR). The SEMR involves three phases of reading instruction:

- Phase 1 involves selections designed to stimulate reading interest and follow-up through the selection of high interest read-aloud by classroom teachers accompanied by higher level questioning.
- Phase 2 of the SEMR includes opportunities for silent reading and guided instruction in silent reading by the teacher of self-selected high interest reading materials.
- Phase 3 of the SEMR involves opportunities for self-selected work in a variety of enrichment opportunities in reading.

Seminar Presenter:

Sally M. Reis, Ph.D., Board of Trustees Distinguished Professor
Teaching Fellow, Department of Educational Psychology, University of Connecticut

Sally M. Reis is as a Principal Investigator for the National Research Center on the Gifted and Talented. She was a teacher for 15 years, 11 of which were spent working with gifted students on the elementary, junior high, and high school levels. She has authored or co-authored over 250 articles, books, book chapters, monographs and technical reports. Her most recent work is a computer-based assessment of student strengths integrated with an Internet based search engine that matches enrichment activities and resources with individual student profiles [www.renzullilearning.com]. Her research interests are related to special populations of gifted and talented students, including: students with learning disabilities, gifted females and diverse groups of talented students. She is also interested in extensions of the Schoolwide Enrichment Model for both gifted and talented students and as a way to expand offerings and provide general enrichment to identify talents and potentials in students who have not been previously identified as gifted. She is the Co-Director of Confratute, the longest running summer institute in the development of gifts and talents. She has been a consultant to numerous schools and ministries of education throughout the U. S. and abroad and her work has been translated into several languages and is widely used around the world. She is co-author of The Schoolwide Dilemmas Model, The Secondary Triad Model, Dilemmas in Talent Development in the Middle Years, and a book published in 1998 about women's talent development entitled Work Left Undone: Choices and Compromises of Talented Females. Sally serves on several editorial boards, including the Gifted Child Quarterly, and is a past President of the National Association for Gifted Children. She recently was honored with the highest award in her field as the Distinguished Scholar of the National Association for Gifted Children and named a fellow of the American Psychological Association.
