21st Century Web Resources for Teachers and Students

Who: K-12 teachers and other interested educators

When: Wednesday, October 6th - Tuesday, December 7th, 2010

Description:

Participants will engage in both structured and independent exploration of a variety of online resources that can be used in enhancing their classroom instruction for the 21st century. Activities are designed to familiarize participants with advanced search features; examine and discuss Internet use concerns (copyright, safety, plagiarism) and how to address these concerns in their classroom; explore interactive learning tools and learning objects; examine online primary resources and how they can enhance technology use in the classroom; and explore Web 2.0 tools, including online writing and graphics from the web, and how they can change the use of the Internet for teachers and students in the classroom. Participants will also explore teacher resources found within portals such as BadgerLink, Thinkfinity, Wisconsin History, Library of Congress and will share ideas through weekly discussions with other participants.

During this online class you will:

1. complete weekly readings, viewing of websites, or hands-on assignments that will provide techniques on Internet searching, website evaluation, and resources to use in the classroom.
2. participate in weekly online discussions based on readings and activities.
3. create a lesson plan that incorporates the effective use of one or more techniques that are covered during class.

Viterbo Credit: Two graduate credits from Viterbo University will be available for $180. Enrollment forms will be mailed to participants prior to the start date of the class.
